The kids Wool-Aid helps

Beginning in 2010, warm woolen clothing and blankets made by Wool-Aid volunteers have been sent to children in Alaska, Canada, Mongolia, Kazakhstan, Afghanistan, Syria, Lebanon, Jordan, Tibet, India, and Nepal.

What do these places have in common?
All of these places are extremely cold, and the people who live there have extraordinary needs and very limited resources. In most of these countries, the temperatures are often −40° in the winter—or even colder! With such harsh winters, the people often suffer from a lack of food, shelter, medical care, and clothing. And it is the children who suffer most.

We know that our handcrafted clothing will have a long lifespan in these communities. A wool sweater, for example, will not only keep one child warm for a winter season, but over a period of many years, it will keep several children warm.

Wool-Aid is a community of knitters and crocheters who create warm woolen hats, socks, sweaters, vests, mittens, and blankets for children who live in the coldest climates and have the least access to resources.

We work with organizations that put the human imperative first; that provide aid regardless of the race, creed, or nationality of the recipients; and that do not use aid to further a particular political or religious viewpoint. Priority is given to helping populations where washable items are neither required nor recommended.

Guidelines

We use wool. Wool is warm and stays warm even when it’s wet. Please use fiber that is at least 80% wool and worsted weight or heavier.

We create garments in a warm, dense woolen fabric.

We focus on children 8 to 16 years old, though items for infants through teens are very welcome.

Sweaters and vests should close securely if not a pullover style. They should have good coverage for the chest and ample length for the body and arms.

Hats and mittens should be thick and dense, with extra length on the cuffs. Please tie mittens together at the cuff.

Socks should be worsted weight or slightly heavier. (Sock yarn stranded with worsted weight yarn adds durability.) Socks should have standard heels, with the leg of the sock as long as the foot. Please tie socks together at the cuff.

Blankets follow the standard guideline of 80%+ wool. We aim for a 40” × 40” size for baby blankets and 40” × 60” for child blankets.

See additional guidelines on the Wool-Aid website, including our Sweater Dimension Guidelines with chart and illustrations.

Please avoid very light colors, and do not use acrylic or novelty yarn.
